Nature Computational Science launches in response to increased interest and volume of literature about the connection between computer science (including scientific computing and data science), mathematics, and natural sciences.

The journal will publish across key themes of computational science, including, but not limited to cheminformatics, geoinformatics, computational models, materials science, and urban science.

Go to nature.com/natcomputsci for more