

HOW DOES RECRUITMENT BENEFIT YOUR JOURNAL?

Recruitment can increase the number of Editors that are available to handle manuscripts, improving the speed of peer-review.

Improve your service to authors

Improved speed of peer-review makes your journal more attractive to authors: they will be more likely to entrust their best work to your journal.

Develop your Editorial Board

Bring new expertise into your journal: grow your network of Editors in active and emerging research communities.

A deeper bench of subject experts will help your journal better recognise the potential of submissions and their contribution to the field.

Reduced editorial workloads will allow Editors to focus more deeply on the science in individual manuscripts, improving the quality of published articles in your journal.

Recruitment will help ensure that your journal is represented and advocated for in key research centres.

Grow your journal

A diverse board of highly qualified researchers will better reflect the interests of your journal's community, including submitting authors.

Editors can use their personal networks to attract high-quality research and promote the journal.
