

Supplementary Material

Article Title:

Uncertain refuge: declining giant clam populations in a protected marine area of Sabah, Malaysia

Authors

Fung Chen Chung^{a*}, Sze Hoon Gan^a, Hin Boo Wee^{bd}, Leony Sikim^{ac}

Affiliations

^aInstitut Marin Borneo, Universiti Malaysia Sabah, Jalan UMS, 88400 Kota Kinabalu, Sabah, Malaysia.

^bInstitute of Climate Change, Universiti Kebangsaan Malaysia, 43600 Bangi, Selangor Darul Ehsan, Malaysia.

^cReef Guardian Sdn Bhd. Lot 1, Taman Tyng, 90000 Sandakan, Sabah, Malaysia.

^dInstitut Oseanografi dan Sekitaran (INOS), Universiti Malaysia Terengganu (UMT), Kampung Pak Tuyu, 21300 Kuala Terengganu

Corresponding Author (*)

Fung Chen Chung

Email: achierchung@ums.edu.my

Contents of this file:

Supplementary Material 2: Figures supporting the Discussion on the impact of river run-off on the giant clam population.

Uncertain refuge: declining giant clam populations in a protected marine area of Sabah, Malaysia

Supplementary Figures

Figure S1. Detached giant clam mantles observed on 15 January 2007.

Figure S2. Sea cucumbers and giant clam mantles washed ashore on 15 January 2007

Figure S3. A blue-green algal boom in August 2014 covered a large area on the northern and northeastern side of the island.

Figure S4. Thick blue-green algae covering corals in shallow areas in August 2014.

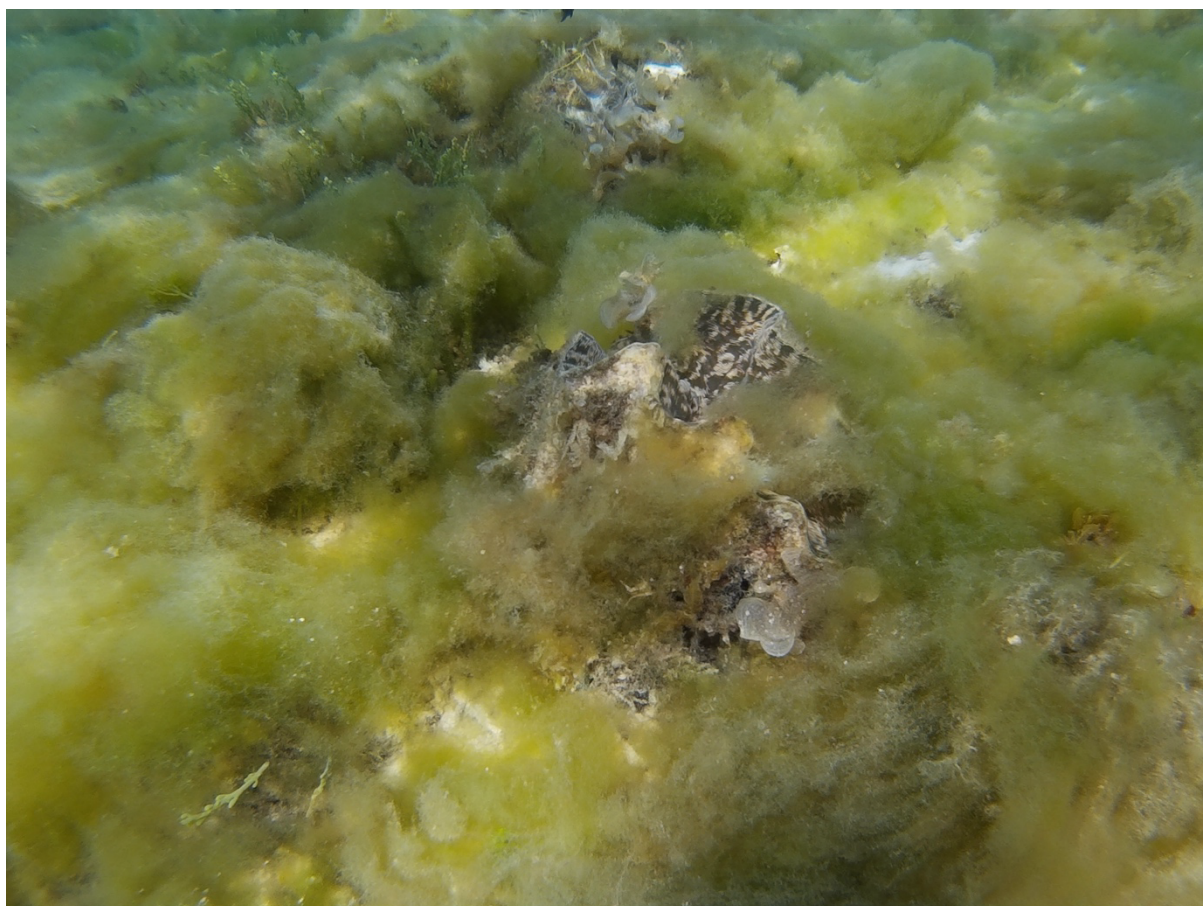

Figure S5. Thick blue green algae covering giant clams (Hippopus hippopus) in August 2014.